Modern Cold Supply Chain should develop at village level. I think it wouldn't be possible for the growers or farmers initially to develop it because of reluctant bankers and lack of trained man power.

Investors, Corporates, Market players should take interest to develop cold chain from farm to distributing centres in urban areas. Also, Govt. should take initiatives to promote renewable energy for lowering the cost of energy used to develop cold supply chain.

In India, around 30% of the fresh and perishable farm produce is wasted due to poor infrastructure, lack of storage & lack of information about the post harvest management.

It's the need of the hour to minimize these losses by creating modern supply chain.

11:05 - 12:00 Inaugural Panel Discussion: "Cold Chain: The next big thing in India"- Transforming the gaps into opportunities for the vision 2025.

With a large no of cold chain projects, mega food parks, annual grants, subsidies and tax exemptions, the government is doing its part to propel the cold chain industry into a new orbit. 30%, this industry carries the potential to be the next big thing in India — creating jobs, innovation opportunities, empowering the rural unorganized sector and most importantly making the India brand stronger in global exports of vaccines, drugs and food products. However, still there is a big gap between national perishable production in India and cold chain infrastructure which is leading to approximately 40 percent wastage. This gap is indicative of an incredible opportunity that development of cold chains presents. Moreover, it has the potential to impact every aspect of the Indian economy to achieve the vision 2025.

Session Highlights:

A candid conversation with the Industry expert followed by Q&A with the audience

Addressing Issue- "Skill Gap"- Creating a reformed workforce to elevate India's standing in the cold chain market globally. (The knowledge gap is most acutely felt in cold-chain, largely as the service sector is yet to develop beyond the previous infrastructure development focus. Appropriate skill-sets are intrinsic to cold chain since such service involves product and cargo specific inputs and continued attention. These skill inputs are addition to those needed in the ordinary supply chain or any other generic logistics activities)
